

Contents

Preface	vii
Chapter 1: Conceptions of Islamic education	1
Three constitutive meanings of Islamic education: Between minimalist and maximalist views	1
Truth and justice as reasons for enacting Islamic education	5
Knowledge, truth and justice	8
Chapter 2: Islamic education and practices	15
Ummah as a democratic practice of Islamic education	15
Chapter 3: Islamic educational institutions	39
Practices and institutions	41
Maximalist views of Islamic education in early Islamic institutions	43
Islamic thought in South Asian madāris	49
Islamic thought in Southeast Asia	52
Islamic education in modern Turkey	54
Islamic education in South African madāris	56
Minimalist-maximalist views of Islamic education in contemporary (1990–2010) South African madāris : The apartheid and post- apartheid periods	66
Chapter 4: Towards maximalist notions of Islamic education	85
Islamic education and peace (salām) discourses	85
Islamic education and compassion (rahmah)	97
Islamic education and happiness	103
Chapter 5: Islamic education and cosmopolitanism	107
Cosmopolitanism as education	107
Cosmopolitanism as an instance of Islamic education	113

Chapter 6: Towards a madrasah imaginary: Cultivating a maximalist view of Islamic education	123
Islamic education as responsibility for the other.....	123
Islamic education as critique: Reconstituting the place of thinking in the madrasah	127
Islamic education and friendship	130
Bibliography.....	137